due to the same history—may be beside her. The really interesting part of his first remark, a stimulating one, before the drawing room door is closed, and his companion is tripping with smiles and talking vivaciously to the neglect of her soup. But those of us are unskilled. We fumble among the intellectual coils at our disposal for a puny—Protection, the Gailic moment, Imperialism, Free Will, the state of the British drama, the Origin of Life—all of these interesting matters, but not to be started with these or four words of query to Mrs.—now who and what is she? You have to talk for an hour or more, or make her talk. Take heart! It matters little what you say to begin with. But say it quickly. Otherwise the more difficult part will fall to you. Mr. Anybody may say that it has been a seasonable day. Then where are you? Well, there is a way out.

'My bread, I think.' Thousands of men have opened conversation thus, and many of them have married in consequence. That is only when the lady has countered correctly. The absolutely wrong reply is 'Yes' and even 'No,' though it might lead to argument, and the invocation of a Hague Conference between the butler and the host and the parlour-maid is by no means the right answer, even if it were truthful. For here is the very crucial point of the game of talk; and it is the lady's turn. On her answer depends the success of the meeting. 'Yes' 'No' It is the host's turn to speak. The proper of conversation. But if she says 'Yes,' I always keep my broad on the right. (She can easily steal the bread of her neighbour, who will probably be grasping with a conversational opening with his own partner.) Then it is your turn, and your course is easy. 'Yes' always that is a sign of originality,' you say; 'now I wonder if you—I need go no further. The conversation is in full blast at once, not that the personal note is touched. You will perceive the principle by the solution of this problem. It is the duty of both strangers to leave the opening wide for a reply—an objection, a note of exclamation, an addition—anything but the host on the grasshopper. Wherefore it is the first retort that turns the train on to the main line of pleasant intercourse, or shunts it into a siding of silence.

Unfortunately one cannot depend upon the willingness and agility of the casual stranger; and every man who meets new people continually should have that opening remark on his shirt-cuff. It should be a stimulating one—in case of a dull partner, for you cannot expect at every dinner party to meet the clever woman who can make an interesting countermove to the opening remark. 'Hot weather, what!' There are some who can do it, but you must not reckon on meeting them often. You will do well to put on the shirt-cuff some such opening as I have used with effect many times, and on never use again after it has appeared in type. 'Your brother-in-law met my brother. 'Your brother-in-law met my brother, smiling at the card by my plate. 'Curious thing, but I never met him myself.'

'Never met him!' 'No. He's dead.' 'Oh! I'm sorry.' 'But isn't that a little—' she refuses cherry. 'You see he died a year before I was born, and lived but an hour after.'

For the remainder of the evening my partner is trying to discover whether I am insouciant or merely an ordinary dangerous imbecile.—Clarence Rook, in the Chronicle.
